Things to think about

Being aware of how your anger works is the first step to change.

Anger has signals in our bodies, our emotions, our thinking and our actions.

Signals in our bodies can include: tense muscles, higher heart rate, faster breathing, feeling hot or sweating.

Signals in our emotions and thoughts can include: losing patience, becoming more determined, feeling strong or having thoughts of revenge.

Signals in our actions can include: shouting, hitting, being silent and withdrawn, or being sarcastic.

Activity

This week, set aside 15 minutes each day to fill in your Anger Diary. The aim of this exercise is simply to become more aware of how your anger works.

How to fill out the table

- Angry events can range from feeling mildly irritated to very angry. Take note of the number of angry events however mild they are. Next, on a scale of 1-10, rate the most angry event of the day (1=mildly irritated to 10=enraged).
- Write down the different signs of anger in your body, your emotions, your thoughts and your actions. If there was more than one angry event in the day, focus on the most intense angry event.
- If you miss a day, don't give up. Simply skip to the next day or fill in two days at once.
